AVI-SPL to Exhibit at West 2010 Conference

Booth 709 to Spotlight Battle Command Information Systems® (BCIS)

TAMPA, Fla. Jan. 26, 2010 – AVI-SPL, the largest global integrator of audiovisual systems and services, today announced it will exhibit at the Western Conference and Exhibition (West 2010), which will be held Feb. 2-4 at the San Diego, California Convention Center.

Exhibiting at Booth #709, AVI-SPL will showcase a variety of audiovisual systems including its Battle Command Information Systems® (BCIS), a commercial off-the-shelf display system, delivering critical information used by emergency responders, military commanders and even corporate executives. In less than one hour, two individuals can have the system assembled and operational in any tent structure. Portable, compact and powerful, this system allows the user maximum flexibility in a 24/7 environment. AVI-SPL will also be demonstrating Crestron Touchpanel controls and videoconferencing solutions from Tandberg.

“AFCEA West is the largest military communications conference supporting all military commands on the West Coast,” said Tom Corzine, AVI-SPL’s vice president, government services. “This conference is a great opportunity for our company to discuss new technologies available to our current and future customers.”

According to the AFCEA web site, West 2010, co-sponsored by AFCEA International and the U.S. Naval Institute, features the latest technology for government communications, electronics, intelligence, information systems, imaging, military weapon systems, aviation, shipbuilding, and more.
